The Istituto italiano per gli studi storici, founded in 1946, aims to give young university scholars with a strong interest in historical studies, the opportunity for in-depth study into history and its relationship with logic, philosophy, ethics, human rights, political economy, religion, and art. These fields define and testify human ideals, values and aims, and as such these are the subjects the historian is called upon to interpret in order to recount history.

Fellows will have a place to study at the Institute's Library, which nowadays consists of about 150.000 volumes and they will also be allowed to use the Library of Benedetto Croce.

Scholarship works of particular relevance will be published in the «Annals», which have now reached their XXXV volume, or in the «Monographic series», which has reached its 80th volume, or in one of the series of the «Incipit» editorial project.

The Institute carries out its activities thanks to contributions from: Dipartimento per le politiche di coesione, Ministero dell'Università e della Ricerca, Ministero della cultura, Regione Campania.
